The Force for Progress is more than a scorecard for legislators; it is also a reflection of the collective work of California's Labor Movement.

We believe in economic security for all workers, whether or not they are in a union. Among our finest accomplishments in 2012 was winning a law along with the Attorney General to stop banks from foreclosing on families who are struggling to stay in their homes and modify their loans.

Additionally, we mandated that corporations be responsible for conditions in their warehouses where they have out-sourced the operations to third-party labor contractors, and required that state call center contracts create jobs here in California instead of offshore.

The Federation also negotiated directly with employers to restore fairness to the workers' compensation system and increase benefits to injured workers.

The Force for Progress also highlights challenges to the pro-worker agenda. Faced with an army of corporate lobbyists, many legislators chose to side with big business, not with working families. You can see the examples here. Nevertheless, we made some real progress: protections for homeowners, accountability for the banks, approval for high-speed rail, enforcement in the underground economy, and new rights for temporary workers.

This year the Force for Progress has special meaning. For the third time in 14 years, California Labor faced an initiative intended to silence workers and magnify the power of corporations. Our members rose up in historic numbers to defeat Proposition 32, and simultaneously carried the state to other big electoral wins. We can again thank the enemies of organized labor for motivating workers to mobilize for the elections.

Our members, and the millions of workers who fight everyday for safer worksites, fairness on the job, and a path out of poverty, understand that the purpose of building political power is to make a difference in the lives of California families. Together we are California Labor and we are committed to restoring the California Dream of opportunity and fairness for all.

In Solidarity,

Art Pulaski
Executive Secretary-Treasurer

Connie Leyva
President

Our members rose up in historic numbers to defeat Proposition 32, and simultaneously carried the state to other big electoral wins.
